

To be or not to be?

...That is the question of existence

A worthiness test that faces us all every day but particularly during times of great struggle and hardship.

Should we forgive others for their mistakes, and authentically try to help them 'see the light', in order that we ourselves may keep our faith in humanity and stay true to our authentic common human identity?

Or should we give up on humanity, and use deception to pretend to be something else to fit in instead?

Curiously, not all of us make the same choice. Indeed few have ever considered just what it is that gives rise to choice as a construct to begin with. Ultimately, it's far easier to turn into something else than it is to resist the pain we all feel from darkness.

The workings of a human soul

Wholly testable scientifically, we can put the question - of whether we live in an infinite regression of artificial simulated (thus meaningless) universes - to bed for good. There is one truly unique, observable system that is anything but binary...
